

I believe my goals are unique because from a young age, many people generally plan to go to school, get a degree, get a good job and own a nice house with fancy cars. I am unlike that. Ever since I was 5, I wanted to travel the world and see the different types of dances from all the different countries, as well as do some volunteer work in developing countries. I recently got the opportunity to visit Costa Rica and I was fortunate enough to volunteer at a school by helping them read in English, since they learn Spanish as a primary language and English as a secondary language. It was an amazing experience because I had also learned two language in school, so it was so great to watch kids go through a similar situation that I went through when I was their age. I have been to very few countries, although if I received this scholarship, I would be able to travel all over the world and learn all the different types of dance while volunteering in developing countries.
